The ideal situation, according to Harberger, would be an investor's arrival with the "machinery on his back" so to speak. This would ensure that the form of financing, here foreign investment, be transformed into increases in imported products — in this case, the machinery brought directly by the investor.

Speech by Mr. Sergio Undurraga at the New York Association of Business Economists

"Trade, Aid, Financing and External Debt . . . Prospects for the Developing Countries" was the subject of the annual seminar of the New York Association of Business Economists in New York City on June 9, 1977. Among the speakers were Messrs. Fred Bergsten, Assistant Secretary for International Affairs of the U. S. Department of the Treasury; Paul A. Volcker, President of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and Sergio Undurraga, President of CORFO's New York Office. We reproduce below Mr. Undurraga's speech as delivered by Isidoro Palma, his representative, since the former had to fly to Chile unexpectedly at that time.

"I would like to present a brief commentary concerning the problems of foreign debt and balance of payments for the case of the so-called 'non-oil, less-developed countries' from the point of view of Chile, which is one of them.

In many ways, the financial problems of Chile typify those of the developing countries. Debt payments are particularly important as they represent a significant limiting factor in the country's development as well as its international liquidity.

In another sense, however, one must recognize that the case of Chile may not be entirely typical due to the great changes which have taken place in its institutions and policies in the last decade.

Our main thesis can be summed up as follows: "Non-oil, less-developed countries" can avoid the incurring of excessive foreign debt during periods of Trade Balance crises if these countries are willing to adopt realistic domestic policies consistent with their external situation. Realizing the need to borrow abroad in order to maintain adequate investment rates, such policies if implemented would probably result in a lower rate of internal growth or even a recession. Nevertheless, this "trade-off" between international liquidity and internal growth need not be permanent. Such is the case with Chile. The road each country chooses will depend ultimately upon the levels of foreign debt preceding the international crisis, the magnitude of the "liquidity crunch", as well as the domestic costs implicit in a deflationary policy.

Chile's Situation at Year's End 1973

The Chilean economic situation can be outlined as follows:

- By the end of 1973 the country's annual inflation rate was approaching a figure of almost 1,000% due basically to the overextension and inefficiency of the public sector. In 1973, fiscal spending amounted to 43% of the GNP. The deficit, representing over 55% of fiscal monies spent, was financed to a great extent by the Central Bank.
- Externally, the country had experienced three consecutive years of deficit both in the Current Accounts and the Balance of Payments. As a consequence, by mid-1973 the level of reserves of the Central Bank had fallen to virtually zero.
- The level of foreign debt had grown in real terms to a rate greater than 7% per year, representing a figure of about US$ 4 billion (about 45% of the GNP). In today's dollar, that figure exceeds US$ 5 billion.
- The nature of this debt was very unfavorable due to successive renegotiations made in 1970, 1971 and 1972 which transferred a good amount of the payments and interest dues to the period 1975-1980.
- Chile had lost the confidence of financial creditors in world markets.

How Could Such a Situation Possibly Come About?

The reasons were numerous, but among them stand out:

- a) The Central Bank's use of international reserves (about US$ 400m as of September 1970) to finance a massive transfer of private industries to the public sector as well as to permit salary increases considerably beyond the productivity growth and internal inflation rates.
- b) The adoption of a virtually fixed exchange rate system. This means that in real terms the exchange rate in August 1973 was only 1/5 of the rate 2½ years earlier.
- c) A disastrous agricultural policy which resulted in a tremendous increase in imports. In 1973, the country imported US$ 600m worth of foodstuffs, the equivalent of more than 50% of Chile's "copper revenues" of that year. Those US$ 600m correspond to about US$ 800m in 1976 dollars.

Re: EXHIBIT 14 (a)

This schedule shows the relationship between the disbursements made by Corfo-New York and the funds received, grouped into three major payment categories.

The nomenclature has been changed from that of previous reports but remains the same in substance. The sources of funds are:

- 1) CORFO-Santiago: received from our Main Office representing funds generated by our Corporation in Chile.
- 2) Subsidiaries and other Public Entities: received through the Chilean commercial banks by order of various Affiliates, Subsidiaries, Ministries and other Public Entities for which this office acts as purchasing agent and represents funds generated by those entities.
- 3) International Development Banks: received from International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Interamerican Development Bank, Agency for International Development, Export Import Bank of the United States and represents the proceeds of loans granted to Corfo and Affiliates.
- 4) U.S. Commercial Banks: represents financing obtained from various U.S. Banks.

The payment categories, or application of funds, were:

- 1) Repayment of Foreign Debt: representing payments made to creditors.
- 2) New York Office expenses: represents payments made to cover administrative cost of maintaining the New York Office of Corfo and Affiliates and their supporting staff.
- 3) C.I.F. Value of Purchases: covers full value of Purchase Orders processed during the period.
